HAS A GRIEVANCE

A Colored Employee that Like His Treatment at The Asylum.

One more negro slave tracked at the asylum, by the Republicans who call themselves a negro's friends. But when you make them show their hand you find them the bitterest pill that any negro ever swallowed. I will say that between myself and a white Republican that was an employee at the asylum, a matter came up that forced me to ask protection for my family from the Superintendent of the institution, which I did at least three times. But instead of the authorities protecting us from the inmate that had been perpetrated upon my family, they discharged me and retained the evil-doer.

You tell me about the Republican party? All you colored people have to do is go to the asylum at meal time and see your Republican friends feed twenty negroes out of seven soups, but knives and forks for only one half of them. They scatter the bread as if feeding so many hogs.

In the time of Dr. Rodman and his successor Dr. Stoue, we had knives and forks and plates enough for all and were treated like human beings. But Oh! what changes time has wrought.

I suppose this is the change that Gov. Bradley promised us, when the "rascals" were turned out. If this is not what he promised, this is what we got.

You appointed Judge Anderson for Steward, and the negroes dreamed of great things, but when we saw we found it a joke. But he and his Republican friends will find that the negro is somewhat of a joker when he comes to the polls in November.

I want to say to the colored people of Christian county, that the time has come for you to vote for the man, and let the Republican bug in Hopkinsville fall down hard.

I saw that letter to day, wherein Dr. Gardiner promised Charlie Hampton to let the inmate at the asylum go, put the white public in still there will be there until Gabriel toots his horn.

Parents cannot raise children properly without the rod, neither will the Ring be good until gloriously defeated.

MR. BRYAN'S SPEECH.

Heard By 5,000 People at the L. & N.

Mr. Bryan passed through the city as had been announced at 5:40 o'clock Tuesday evening and made a talk of ten minutes at the depot. It had been arranged to take him to a platform a few feet from the track, but the train ran a little too far and before it could move back the crowd closed in behind and completely cut off Mr. Bryan from the platform. He accordingly made his speech from the platform of the car, but it was only heard by a small portion of the 5,000 people present and packed in a solid mass about the depot. This change in the plan was a disappointment to a majority of those present, who expected him to take the platform and then get to his brief speech.

While the train was taking on those who went to Madisonville, Hon. S. B. Ryan followed Mr. Bryan in a seven or eight or three minutes. Those who heard him at Madisonville were amply repaid for the trip as his speech was a very fine one. A great many others from here went to Princeton Wednesday and heard him at that place.

Mr. Johnson Not Turned Loose.

A stranger giving his name as Jas. B. Johnson, who appeared to be a tramp, was found weak and exhausted in a field near Dick Sadtler's yesterday morning. County Judge Breathitt went out to the place to see about the man, who appeared to be sane. He could not give a satisfactory account of himself, but said he had lived at Se-bro, Ky. Judge Breathitt offered to get him a ticket to Se-bro, but he exhibited a roll of money and said he didn't need it. He was taken to the poor house pending further investigation.

On A Serious Charge.

Thursday night officers brought from Kirkmansville, this county, and lodged in jail here one Leoker Lear, a young white man about 20 years old charged with the crime of assault upon a 14 year old white girl by the name of Willis. The examining trial of Lear was held before Judge Murphy at Kirkmansville and the prisoner held under a $500 bond to await the action of the grand jury. The crime is said to have been attempted about three miles from Kirkmansville over in Muhlenburg county and Lear was captured by Muhlenburg officers and turned over to Todd county authorities. None of the further particulars could be obtained. —Elkton Progress.

Dr. Jarrard K. Smith, a Hawaiian government physician, was assassinated by a native woman mother and sister, Dr. Smith had declared leprosy.

Destroyed 1000 Bats.

Last Saturday fire broke out in the woods near Mr. H. C. Brasher's, in North Christian, and spread so rapidly that the flames caught the fence surrounding his farm, destroying about 1000 bats. It is thought that the fire was started from a cigar stump, thrown away by some hunter.

More Rain Predicted.

Hicks predicts in his October forecasts, another rain in the next day or so. A regular storm period extends from the 14th to the 18th. Warner weather will prevail, with cloudiness and rain, followed by very cold nights and snow to the north. Heavy rain storms towards the last of the month, followed by a very cool wave for the time of the year.

Tobacco Barn Burned.

The large tobacco barn of Mr. C. K. Fleming of the Howell neighborhood, was destroyed by fire Wednesday. There were about 8,000 pounds of fine tobacco in the barn. It caught while "firing" was in progress. Mr. Fleming's loss is about $1,000. He had no insurance, and the loss falls very heavily upon him, as all of his crop was destroyed.

Any One Thing To Defeat Cook

Murray, Ky., Oct. 12.—George Duignan, radical populist of Murray this afternoon filed his certificate signed by the requisite number of voters, and is therefore a candidate for county clerk's attorney against W. R. Howell, democrat, of Hopkinsville, in the 11th judicial district.

"Dummy" Damage Suit.

The damage case of Parker McCombs, col., against the L. & N. for $25,000 has been on trial for two days and is still in progress. McCombs, who is a deaf and dumb barber, was walking on the track when he was struck and both legs cut off below the knees. He is now going about on peg legs with the aid of crutches. The case is proving to be a long drawn out one and a verdict will probably not be reached before to-morrow.

Fell Among Picket-Posts.

W. A. Morris, contractor for the L. & N. road, while en route from Dawson to Princeton on a train Wednesday morning, and his pocket picked, the thief got about $103 in cash, a check for $35, railroad pass and some other valuable papers. There was a large crowd on board the train going to Princeton to hear the Bryan speaking and Mr. Morris at the time was jostled considerably. As soon as he recovered himself he felt for his valuables and found that he had been robbed.

The Boiler Exploded.

While Mr. W. H. Graham, of this city, was boring a well near Cold Station Wednesday the boiler exploded, throwing pieces of casting and timbers in every direction. Mr. Graham was knocked down and pretty badly hurt. His head and face were cut in several places and he was otherwise bruised and cut. Several of his hands were also slightly injured. Mr. Graham was able to return to this city Wednesday, where his wounds received medical attention. The loss on boiler and outfit amounts to about $1,000.

FOUNDER OF W. C. T. U.

White Ribbons For Home to Mother Miss Thompson.

Her Eighty-first Birthday Observed in Many Places—Was the Organizer of Woman's Crusades Against Saloons.

"Mother" Thompson came from Hillsboro, O., to Chicago on August 23. She carried an old, frayed and much-mended blue ribbon pinned to the lapel of her jacket. Others wearing white ribbons bowed in deference to the aged woman, and each wished the others to do her honor. For "Mother" Thompson began the movement out of which has grown the Woman's Christian Temperance union, and that society observed the eighty-first anniversary of her birth on that day.

The noon meeting in Willard hall took the form of a birthday celebration in honor of the aged crusader, who sat on the platform and recalled that day many years ago when she led the first woman's crusade against saloons in her native town of Hillsboro.

"Mother" Thompson's birthday anniversary was observed throughout the United States, and she was not forgotten in any part of the world where the significant white ribbon is worn.

"Mother" Thompson, says the Chicago Post, entered the ranks of temperance workers when still a laughing maiden. In 1828 when the first national temperance convention was held within the old, historic walls of Independence hall, in Philadelphia, Pa., Trimble, of Ohio, one of the delegates, brought his young daughter Eliza along. When the twins came to the portal of the convention chamber the young girl drew modestly. No other woman was there and the governor's daughter ventured timidly to remonstrate with her father. "No daughter of mine," said the governor in a good cause, even if she is alone," said the governor of the state of Ohio.

These words encouraged the girl and throughout the convention she was the observed of all observers. The zeal of the delegates at this initial convention impressed the young girl so deeply that she determined with her father's consent to brave the dangers of an open street crusade. One day when she appeared on the streets of Hillsboro, O., her native town, at the head of a courageous band of women temperance workers and stormed the first saloon it created a sensation. The news spread like wildfire over the town and surrounding country.

"The governor's daughter is marching upon the saloons," was the cry. Not only were the people of Hillsboro stirred up to interest in the cause of abstinence, but soon the news of the beautiful young temperance leader stirring a hurra among the people of the country until she was regarded as the patron saint of the woman's movement for temperance in this country.

The annals of the woman's Christian Temperance union date from that crusade as the founding of that society. Not only did the slender girl who organized the first foray upon saloons win the plaudits of the people of the eastern states, but within a few days after the first crusade similar movements were begun in almost every state in the union. It is not surprising that the woman like wildfire, and everywhere the woman came forward. Until Eliza Trimble raised her voice in exhortation no woman's voice had been heard in the councils of temperance workers or in the practical propaganda.

This outbreak of woman's zeal had another side. Where one woman was wiped out ten sprang up in another portion. This was bitterly deplored by Gen. Neal Dow, the "grand old man in temperance cause." He regarded the movement as a movement of hysterical. This apostle thought little of the W. C. T. U., which was born soon after the young girl in Ohio started out on her nemoral crusade. Neal Dow did not foresee the tremendous influence which the women were to wield in the blue ribbon cause. All her life "Mother" Thompson's name came to be known, after marrying Judge Thompson, devoted her efforts and energy to the cause. When the movement was recognized by the appointed advocates as Miss Willard the W. C. T. U. developed into the powerful engine for prohibition which it is today.

Profit in Selling Stamps.
It costs the government to print five cents for 1,000 stamps, delivered anywhere in the United States. It will thus be seen that the United States makes $19.95 on every 1,000, 5-cent stamps issued and five cents on every 1,000 ten-cent stamps issued.

Girls Inhabiting the Island of Rhineland, near Rhodes, are not allowed to marry until they have brought up a certain number of sponges. Each sponge costs a certain death. The people of the island earn their living by the sponge fishery.

ASSURED TRADE DISCOUNTS.

Printed Price, Less Are No Longer Any Guide to Purchasers.

The adulterous custom of single, double, triple, quadruple, quintuple, and even some sexuple discounts from printed price lists now prevailing in some trades where competition is keen has reached a point of absurdity when it is hard to believe can actually exist in any business conducted by sane persons. In the gas pipe trade, for example, "57 per cent. off the pipe list" may seem to the uninitiated quite a liberal discount; but there are "trillers" added to this, like knots on a kite's tail, increasing in number according to the size of the order and the standing of the customer.

"Fifty-seven per cent. and six tons off" is a familiar quotation in this trade; and as we presume that the majority of our readers will not understand the meaning of the technical phraseology, we will do the arithmetical sum for their benefit. Thus an article is listed perhaps at one dollar; 57 per cent. off leaves 43 cents net; 10 per cent. off of 43 cents leaves 38.65 cents; 10 per cent. off of 38.65 cents leaves 34.78 cents; 10 per cent. off of 34.78 cents leaves 31.30 cents; 10 per cent. off of 31.30 cents leaves 28.17 cents; 10 per cent. off of 28.17 cents leaves 25.35 cents; 10 per cent. off of 25.35 cents leaves 22.82 cents—the net price of the article.

The Oil, Paint and Drug retailer, in discussing the condition of the plate-glass trade, says: "It is not believed that there is much profit in selling at the present low price of 90 per cent. off the list price." Further on he reads: "It is thought by some people interested in the business that the end is not yet, and that 90 and 10 per cent. will be reached before the war is over." Discounts of "80 and 20 and 10" per cent. are allowed by manufacturers of steel wire and wire mesh, not for four or five years ago, but we might penetrate still deeper into this maze of discounts.

What is the explanation of such seemingly puerile, or rather imbecile, proceedings? There appears to be a magic charm in discount, and often does, that some occult reason the seller is giving him peculiar favors. No matter how transparent the trick may be, the purchaser seems to be incapable of penetrating it; he is hypnotized by the magic charm of the sexuple discount. This is the more remarkable when we reflect that the purchaser is, perhaps, also a manufacturer engaged in playing the same game himself. One obvious result of this method of transacting business is to wipe out the small retailer, who cannot obtain the sextuple discounts which large dealers insist upon. The discount system has penetrated almost every trade, from the selling of ponderous power punches to little pills; and the only advantage of a retail dealer is that he is not obliged to initiate retail purchases into the belief that he is securing a bargain when he buys an article at a cost less than the printed price list.

A few years ago, before the department stores embraced so wide a range of sales, the book publishers sold books at retail often at the full list price, and the catalogue with prices attached was conspicuously displayed and consulted for the purchaser's benefit. If the purchaser, however, "knew the ropes" he could always obtain a better price, a discount, and often a great deal more than this. Now the purchaser is relieved of the necessity of this counter play by purchasing the book at a fixed price at a department store.

When the department store first began to sell books, the retail publishers could actually obtain new books cheaper at their counters than by buying directly from the publishers. Book publishers do not now seem to be able to meet the competition of rival retail sellers of their own products, and are giving up the attempt. It is evident that trade discounts have attained such a height of absurdity that the whole system has become too heavy, and is liable to fall at any moment.—Philadelphia Record.

Curious Customs.

A curious marriage custom obtains in the island of Rhineland, just opposite the island of Rhodes. The Greeks, by whom it is peopled, earn their living by the sponge fishery. No girl in this island is allowed to marry until she has brought up a certain number of sponges, which must be taken from a certain depth. In some of the other Greek islands this demonstration of ability is required of the men, and, if there are several suitors for the hand of the maiden, her father bestows her on the man who can dive best and bring up the largest number of sponges.

Pay of French Convicts.

Many of the convicts in French prisons are paid for their labor, and earn about one dollar and five cents a day. Half of this they are allowed to spend for extra food, postage, etc., and the rest is saved, to be given to them on their discharge.

—There are now four times as many wire nails made as can be used.

RESCUE THE WORLD.

This is a Month Surrendered for the New Year.

Countess Mallmann and her daughter Will join the Order of the Sisters of the Visitation—The Church Visited.

"Two women of noble birth, Miss Countess Mallmann, and her gifted daughter, Miss Marie—the former, according to the authorities of the Visitation, a countess of the Prussian kingdom—are soon to forsake the world and its pleasures for the seclusion of cloister cells.

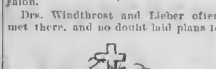

When they assume their veils as brides of the Order of the Visitation they will surrender their wealth and their magnificent estate at New Brighton, N. Y., as dowry to the sisterhood.

They will be received into the order by his grace Archbishop Corrigan with the aid of the countess's own estate. This building is of brick, with granite facings, and is of a severely monastic type of architecture. It is an additional gift from Miss Mallmann to her chosen sisterhood.

Miss Mallmann, says the Cincinnati Commercial, is daughter of the famous old Countess of the Visitation. She will not speak of its history in a worldly sense, but she is proud to recall the fact that her father was known throughout the world as "The Pillar of the Church." She relates with pleasure, too, that during the dark days of the revolution of 1848 his religious duties compelled him to defend the "mother" and that when his body was borne to its last resting place the citizens of Düsseldorf fell upon their knees in the street and prayed for the repose of the soul of their benefactor.

In his castle on the Rhine she met the great leaders of the Catholic party, and after she became Miss Mallmann they were familiar figures in her own salon.

Drs. Windthorst and Lieber often met there, and no doubt laid plans to defeat the repressive measures of Prince Bismarck.

Miss Mallmann left Germany forever in 1876. Her husband, one of the masters of the art of manufacturing fine vases that have made Düsseldorf famous, had left her a fortune which, added to her dowry, made her wealthy beyond the dreams of avarice.

When her husband died her heart turned to her brother, George, who had renounced worldly honors for membership in the Society of Jesus. He was in America, banished, it is said, with his brethren, under Prince Bismarck's famous edict of 1871.

So when Miss Bertha Benziger, herself a countess of an old Catholic family, asked her to visit America, Miss Mallmann came to her help. She grew very fond of this country, as did her three children, Paul, Gabrielle and Marie, and she decided to make it her permanent home.

The beautiful house was built on Brighton Heights. The grounds were laid out under madam's own critical eye. Lawns and paths were imported from Germany, her thoroughbred horses came, too, and there was no prettier show place on Staten Island.

The beginning of the revolution which is to transform their home into a retreat for religious came one day five years ago, when the elder daughter, Gabrielle, announced that she would become a member of the Order of the Sacred Heart.

They missed Miss Gabrielle very much that year, and a year afterward Miss Marie decided upon a religious life. There were several obstacles to overcome, however, but all were cleared away. The city of Brooklyn purchased the home of the Sisters of Visitation, at Parkville, Long Island.

Archbishop Corrigan then invited the order into his jurisdiction, and Miss Mallmann and her daughter offered their fortune and beautiful estate to provide a home for it.

It is the purpose of the archbishop to have the new convent a retreat for new women who are not physically fit for the austere life of other orders.

Strange rules govern the Sisters of the Visitation. They must attend mass in a choir set off from the main chapel. Only on special occasions are they allowed to look upon the Blessed Sacrament, and they can only hold converse with the outer world through a window barred and veiled.

This, then, is the lot chosen by these two noble women. For it they surrender their wealth and their fine estate, with its noble trees, beautiful flower beds, pretty groves and artistic walks. They also give up their home, with its magnificent equipment and a fortune in oil paintings alone.

The house is furnished throughout like a baronial castle. The rooms are superbly decorated. They are rare old, delft, and heiloms that are priceless.

A Fascinating Study in National History—Hydra-Culture.

My friends, it is true, laugh at me, and I laugh at them. They wonder why I am so devoted to "a glass globe full of water, with a few plants and snails," and I tell them that while they seek to admire in horticulture, agriculture, and stock raising, "cultures," I am an enthusiast about a flock of fresh-water polyps, called "hydras," full of interest, full of wonder.

I would envy Trembley, who in 1744 published "A Memoir on the Fresh-Water Polyp," the intense pleasure he felt in unraveling the life history of these creatures. He was investigating the unknown when he studied the strange phenomena connected with them, and was transported with astonishment. I know, from the labor of others, what to expect, and yet I am lost in wonder.

We may be thankful that these animals are as small as they are; for, if they were only a few feet in length, they would have in one water world many a repetition of the devastation said to have been caused by the Lernaean Hydra, whose destruction was one of the gigantic labors of the hero Hercules.

As it is, the longest you can find is only an inch in length. They are of the color of a microscope, the unaided eye, and with the help of a pocket lens can to some extent be studied. In fact, Trembley, the famous observer of them, had nothing better. It is only when we wish to examine minute details that the microscope is called for.

A group of them attached to the rootlets of a duckweed or the under side of the leaves or on the stems of plants is a curious sight. A nearer view may often be obtained, if they will attach themselves to the side of the glass to enjoy the light, which they seem to love.—Robert Blight, in Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.

It is told of Hannah More that she had a dog which was a faithful bearer. It is said that whenever she was told anything derogatory to another her invariable reply was: "Come, we will go and ask if this be true." The effect was something ludicrously painful. The tale bearer was taken aback, stammered out a qualification, or begged that no notice might be taken of the statement. But the good lady was inexorable. Off she took the scandal monger to the scandalized to make inquiry and compare accounts.

It is not likely that anybody ever a second time ventured to repeat a gossip story to Hannah More. One would think her method of treatment would be a sure cure for scandal.

Among the Poultry.

Do not overwork the poultry house. A close, ill-ventilated house is a foul house.

Keep pure, fresh water within the reach of fowls.

Young ducks are most easily raised in small yards.

Nothing tends to engender disease in chickens more than filth in the coop.

A duck fattens easily. This should be guarded against when they are laying.

Sit the hens in a cool place and on the ground, as the weather begins to get hot.

Too much lime used will make the hens too fat, but a small quantity is healthful.

When it is desired to push the growth, rather better results can be secured by feeding on wheat.

There is no good reason for keeping and feeding old male birds after the hatching season is over.

One stumbling block with poultry-keeping is in attempting to keep too large a number in too small a space.

Keep the young turkeys up until the dew has dried off the grass and keep them dry in wet weather.

As a rule the turkey hens prefer to eat their nests out, and if the eggs are secured it is necessary to watch them.

Watering Poultry.
A Device Which is Just as Useful in Winter as in the Summer.

The water of the fowls in winter is often attended with unsatisfactory results. With an ordinary water vessel the birds are likely to spill the water by being upon the edge of the tub. The water then freezes if it be the winter season and causes a very unpleasant state of affairs. The cut shows a plan

The Mayfield Daily Democrat has suspended publication.

Ex Senator Jas. W. Jones, of Florida, died this week.

The Democratic and Republican candidates for county offices have signed an agreement to do no more speaking before the election.

The total registration in Henderson is 1,963, of which 826 are Democrats, 690 Republicans and the rest noncommittal or independent.

Senator W. J. Deboe spoke at the court house Wednesday but his speech failed to make a ripple on the surface of politics.

Judge Breathitt carried Trigg county in 1896 by 25 votes. This time, according to the best posted politicians in that county, he will lose the county by from 250 to 400 majority.

The robbers who looted the Morganfield bank of $3,000 got away with their booty. They have not been captured and are not likely to be.

The statement that Hon. Chas. J. Broun's appointment for this city next Monday had been changed to Cadiz was premature. The appointment has not been changed.

The "Citizens ticket" of Owensboro will go on the ballot under the device of a horse, suggested probably by the desperate straits in which Richard III once found himself.

Senator elect H. D. Money, of Mississippi, has been appointed to the vacancy in the term of the late Senator George, extending until March 4, 1899. Senator Money now has a term of 7½ years before him.

The total registration in Covington is 10,133 and the Democrats show a gain of 1,684, while the Republicans are 834 behind last year. There are 356 independents, but holding these to the Republican vote and the Democrats still have a majority of 2,862.

Judges Cook and Breathitt are this week filling joint appointments in Lyon county. The Democratic cause in that county is in good shape and Cook will get a nice win in spirit. In the last judicial election Lyon gave 107 majority for Linn. This time it will do a good deal better.

Indianapolis has followed the good example set by Chicago, Cincinnati and other Republican cities and gone Democratic by 4000 majority, although the city last year gave McKinley 6,744 majority. Many Republicans voted for Taggart for mayor.

A man named Geo. C. Duguid, said to be a Populist and a lawyer of Murray, has made application for a place on the ballot for Commonwealth's Attorney, claiming to have been nominated by a convention at Eddyville Oct. 7. A conference of those or four men claiming to be Populists but representing nobody but themselves, was held in Eddyville, but there was no convention held, as no delegates had been selected from any county in the district. Duguid is not the nominee of the Populist party and will cut about as much figure in the race as South did at Congress last year, when he got 68 votes out of 80,000. The Calloway Times gives Duguid this significant set off:

"Strange things will happen. But a few days ago a certain lawyer of Murray was a strong advocate of Judge Cook, but now it is pretty generally understood that some unknown hand has been brought to bear upon this distinguished attorney and he is at present just asking to go into the 'log cabin' for Commonwealth's Attorney; and this same man was a candidate in our last primary but was most gloriously defeated. The fact is George, you will again have the pleasure of passing through the same ordeal if you allow your name to be in this canvass. We know George of old."

Mr. Bryan refused to speak at Henderson when he found that those present had paid at the gate to get inside the fair grounds. He persisted in his refusal and the managers were beginning to despair when a way out of the difficulty was suggested. The great Nebraskan said that if an authorized person would announce that the people who had paid to hear him could have their money refunded on application at the ticket office, he would consent to address the crowd. This was agreed to and Hon. Jas. F. Clay was selected to make the announcement, after which the orator was introduced and addressed the great crowd. After he finished, all who chose to do so called at the ticket office and the price paid for admission was refunded to them.

Mr. Bryan's tour through Western Kentucky was a series of triumphs. He spoke ten times at length and made short speeches at a few other places. Everywhere he was greeted by great crowds of enthusiastic and devoted followers, who recognize him as the leader of the Democratic party. Whenever he spoke the greatest enthusiasm was aroused. He is even more popular with the people this year than he was in the campaign last year.

Gov. Bradley appointed a committee of expert chair men to go to the Frankfort penitentiary in company with Walter Forrester and investigate the rascality going on under the chair contract, but the warden refused to show his records. If Gov. Bradley means business he can convene the Legislature to investigate the corruption unseated by Forrester.

According to the Murray Times, Jim has been making some more of his famous deals. This explains "Mr. Breathitt must consider his chances rather desperate when he is forced to sell the master commission to a middle of the road for his 'fluence in this county."

Gen. Blanco will be the third General to try to subjugate the Cubans. He will bring with him 20,000 new soldiers. Gen. Blanco states that he will try pacific measures and failing to restore peace in that way "will act with energy."

Chattanooga Redecord.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 13.—The Democrats gained a big victory here yesterday. They elected their candidate for Mayor and out of eight Aldermen chosen they elected six. The city usually goes Republican by from 100 to 500. National issue were not brought into the campaign.

FEVER GETTING WORSE.

Nearly 3000 Cases To Date and 148 Deaths Reported.

New Orleans, Oct. 13.—This was the record smasher in the number of deaths in a single day from yellow fever since the sickness was first reported in New Orleans. It is difficult to find the cause except in the fact that concealment, neglect and rebellion against the authority of the Board of Health have made it difficult for the physicians to give proper attention to cases. At 7 o'clock this evening there had been nine fatalities reported during the twenty four hours. Heretofore the highest number of deaths in any one day has been six.

The fever has been discovered at another Texas town—Nacogdoches. The City Council of Galveston declines to accept the diagnosis of Dr. Gutierrez and calls for another expert. The fatalities yesterday besides those at New Orleans include one death, each at Edwards, Searaton and McHenry, Miss., Plaquemine parish, La., and Wager, Ala. Aside from New Orleans forty nine new cases reported yesterday.

Following is the record to date: New Orleans: New cases, 31; total, 655; deaths to day, 9; total deaths, 77. Mobile: New cases, 7; total, 136. Magazine Point, three miles from Mobile: New cases, 6, which were brought to Mobile, making 123 there. Deaths to day at Magazine Point, 1; total deaths in and near Mobile, 21. Edwards: New cases, 6; total, 436; deaths to day, 1; total, 25. Searaton: New cases, 7; total, 162; deaths to day, 1; total, 7. Wager, Ala.: New cases, 1; total, 10; deaths to day, 1. Biloxi: New cases, 17; total, 343; total deaths, 14. Nittany: Deaths today, 1; total cases, 10; total death, 8.

Death's sudden summons.

The wife of Mr. Gid Kirby, of Blairbridge, died very suddenly Monday of a congestive chill. She had been complaining for several days, but was not thought to be in a dangerous condition. Suddenly she was attacked with a chill which developed into congestion, causing her death in a short while. She was only 18 years old and had been married about two months. She was the daughter of Mr. Joe Boyd, and was a grand-daughter of the late T. T. Owen. The remains were interred at the Fete Owen burying ground Tuesday afternoon.

BRUNEL, THE ENGINEER.

He Was a Hard Worker, and Took But Little Sleep.

Isambard Brunel's capacity of doing without sleep was very remarkable. "I believe that at that time," writes an intimate friend, referring to the year 1853, "he scarcely ever went to bed, though I never remember to have seen him tired or out of spirits. He was a very constant smoker and would take his nap in an armchair, very frequently with a cigar in his mouth; and if we were to start out of town at five or six in the morning it was the frequent practice to rouse me out of bed about three, by means of the bell (from his chambers to mine), when I would invariably find him up and dressed, and in great glee at the fun of having curtailed my slumbers by two or three hours more than was necessary."

One of his assistants writes to much the same effect: "I never met his equal for sustained power of work. After a hard day spent in preparing and delivering evidence, and after a last dinner he would attend consultations till a late hour, and then, secure against interruption, sit down to his papers and draw specifications, write letters or reports, or make calculations, all through the night. If at all pressed for time, he slept in his armchair for two or three hours, and at early dawn was ready for the work of the day. When he traveled he usually started about four or five in the morning, so as to reach his ground by daylight. His traveling carriage, in which he often slept, was built from his own design, and was a marvel of skill and comfort. This power of work was, no doubt, aided by the abstinence of his habits and by his light and joyous temperament. One luxury (tobacco) he indulged in to excess, and probably to his injury. At all times, even in bed, a cigar was in his mouth, and wherever he was engaged, there, near at hand, was the enormous leather cigar-case so well known to his friends, and out of which he was quite as ready to supply their wants as his own. His light and joyous disposition was very attractive. At no time was he stern, but when traveling or off work he was like a boy set free. There was no fun for which he was not ready."—Cornhill Magazine.

THE IRISH BROGUE.

A Simple Rule That Writers in Dialect Should Observe.

An Irish correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette says: "In your review of Mr. Macnamara's 'Irish Idylls,' you very truly observe that no Irish peasant speaks of the 'priest' as 'pristic,' and it is more than surprising that a writer with such a name could make such a gross mistake. Many writers, however, fall into similar error, notably Mr. Kipling, who makes Private Mulvaney speak of her majesty as the 'quane.' There is a simple rule which writers affecting an Irish brogue would do well to become acquainted with, and thus avoid offending the ears of every Irish reader who knows anything of the matter. Words containing the combination 'eu,' such as tea, meat, etc., are pronounced as if spelled 'te,' 'mate,' etc. Again, words with 'ei,' such as 'reue,' are pronounced 're-ate'; but no words containing the combination 'ie' are ever given that sound. No Irishman mispronounces belief, priest, chief. This is also true of the words containing the double 'e,' such as beef, seen, feel, or queen, with a single exception, the word queer, which, oddly enough, they call 'quie.' And the peculiarity of Irishmen in this matter is readily explained. When English was first taught in that country the first three vowels were given the same sound as they possess in all Latin countries to-day. Soaring this in mind, it is easy to see why 'e' and 'i' are in Ireland sounded as 'ay,' and also why 'ie' is never sounded in the same way. In this connection, it may, perhaps, be mentioned, that Pope and other writers of his day always wrote of a 'dish of tay.'"

An Underground City.

In Galicia, in Austrian Poland, there is a remarkable underground city, which has a population of over 1,000 men, women and children, many of whom have never seen the light of day. It is known as the City of the Salt Mines, and is situated several hundred feet below the earth's surface. It has its town hall, theater and assembly-room, as well as a beautiful church decorated with the pure crystallized rock salt. It is well lighted with electricity. There are numerous instances in this underground city where not a single individual in three or four successive generations has ever seen the sun or the light of day. It is people living in the light of day—Rockbury Gazette.

POULTRY & BEES.

EGGS FOR HATCHING.

How to Pack Them So They Can Be Shipped by Express.

Many poultrymen readily order eggs for hatching to be sent by express. It is of the greatest importance that such eggs should be packed in the very best manner, that they may go safely and hatch well after reaching the purchaser's hands. The "best plan up to date" is shown in the accompanying illustration. A common cheap splint basket, such as is figured, is filled partly full of chaff. In this is set a section of a pine-board egg filter cut to the size needed for an fitting of eggs. Put in the eggs, small end down, and sift in chaff about each egg and about the ends and sides of the egg filter. Cover the top with chaff to a height of two or three inches, then lay a newspaper or two over the top, tucking the edges in carefully about the edges of the basket. Over this lay a piece of pasteboard, cut to fit the top of the basket, and sew the edges to the rim of the basket. The latter should have a newspaper laid in the bottom, at the beginning, before chaff is put in at all. Two sittings can be packed in a deep basket, one above the other, with a thick layer of chaff and newspapers between.—Orange Judd Farmer.

PEACOCK FARMING.

The Birds Require Careful Feeding, But Very Little Management.

Raising peacocks and pheasants is a new business in this country. To supply their wants a number of millionaires are importing eggs and birds from England.

George Vanderbilt is among the number. He has already a lot of peacocks of the breed commonly called "blue"—perhaps because their feathers have a metallic, lacquer-like glittering. They are often spoken of as the Japanese or Japanese peacocks. Theodore Havemeyer has recently imported a lot of pheasant eggs of the choicest breed. He sent them to his model farm, Mahwah, N. J., and has already a company of bantam hens to hatch out the young birds.

Peacocks, although not a common sight in this country, are occasionally seen; pheasants are even more rare—but, as already said, a demand has arisen for them, and a large number of business should be carried on in dealing with both eggs and the birds.

In Suffolk, England, there is a pheasant man upon one estate where more than 100,000 eggs are sold annually, says the Boston Globe. To visit Warwick castle is to see peacocks in all their glory. Indeed the place is famous for these birds, of which the handiwork is white.

Having become possessed of a pair of peacocks, they require very little management, but must be carefully fed. If kept in confinement they keep up pretty substantial living; themselves; it must be seen to that they have plenty of water and grain and occasionally fresh vegetables. In winter they must have a sheltered home. In summer they will themselves find their own trees and in some secluded nook the nest is made. The hen should be left to her own meditations and not interfered with while she is on the nest hatching eggs.

A peacock allowed to make her own nest in a hedge always brings out the stronger and better brood than one hatched in a nest in a house. When hatched the young bird should not be removed until the next day, feeding not being required. The first food should be egg and milk, equal parts beaten together and heated until it gets into a soft mass. This is given with a little milk or wheat. When one side sufficiently to one's stock to sell eggs as well as birds, one's bank account should assume healthy proportions.

Bringing up pheasants by hand is an extensive industry in England, and there is no reason why it should not thrive here. The only reason for not doing so is that the birds are not so plentifully supplied with food, which must be scattered in the places where it is desired they should stay.

Dry earth is a good material to scatter under the roosts. When a thrifty bird is fully matured it is easily fattened. Early hatched, well developed pullets make good winter layers. Blue breed, reared in milk, is a good egg for young poultry. Thrifty, vigorous one-year-old hens make reliable winter layers. Cleanliness and good feeding are the secrets of success with poultry. On the average it will cost one dollar to keep a laying hen one year. Leghorns and black Spanish lay eggs

CATCHING THE TARPON.

A Cattle Royal to Set Afire True Sporting Blood.

The tarpon is a "top-feeder"—that is, he seeks his food near the surface. Those who know him best fish for him with live mullet, which is not allowed to sink more than two feet below the waves, being sustained by a large "float" or cork. The inner portion of his mouth is bone and no hook will take secure hold upon it. This being so, it is necessary to allow him practically to swallow the bait, which he will do by the time that he has moved the float whirling along the water for a space of 30 feet. Afterward is the time to swear and pray. The tarpon reel holds 600 feet of line. Not infrequently when he feels the hook the fish will strike the trail for him, with a secondarily irresistible rush, and keep going. What happens when his 150 pounds of express speed are pitted against the strength of a line that is run out needs not to be told. He simply sails on out to sea, leaving behind him 200 yards of silk, and whether he lives or whether he dies, his former owner knows not. He can only go back to port and surround many jilups and tell plain tales of the size of the wonder that got away.

But if that splendid rush is detected, if the fish dives, if the thumb of an old hand be upon the reel, if the man to whom the hand is attached is cool of head and knows enough to give his adversary the time he needs, the royal is on. For verily the combat between a 150-pound man, sound of mind and science, and a 150-pound tarpon, possessed of the temper of the devil, is a grapple of the gods. The crazed fish time and again leaps three, four, five feet from the water and slashes his head like a dog in his effort to dislodge the hook. A momentary slack of the line is fatal, as with the rapidity of lightning the sharp teeth close upon the strands of the small and when they are severed as if with a knife.

But when the terrific struggles have grown fainter, when the steady, deadly strain of the springing rod has snapped the strength of the gallant tarpon, when the man and the little body is brought near to the boat's edge, when the cruel gaff has smitten the life from it and its beautiful length lies along the deck, the conqueror feels half jubilant, half remorseful, wholly respectful of the giant whose prowess has laid low, and confoundedly weary and dry. He looks at the sun, which seems surprisingly low in the heavens; he looks at his watch and reflects to believe that two hours have passed in that desperate wrestle. But, unless he be in thorough training and past master of his art, a swollen, aching wrist will tell him for days afterward that the silver king of the southern sea he was near to meeting his match.—Chicago Times-Herald.

"THROWN UPON THE WORLD."

Folly of Living Beyond One's Means Plainly Shown.

A visitor to one of the government offices where women are employed in one of our cities desires to give an exact account of what he saw and heard there. He was conducted by the superintendent, an old man of large experience. The room he inspected was filled with women at work.

The visitor remarked: "This is a higher class of women than that employed at the same work in some other kinds of business. These women have been educated and have refined faces and voices. I should judge they are not used to manual labor of any kind."

"They are not," was the reply. "In almost every case they are the widows of druggists or of men who applied with them, but who, while living, gave to their families luxuries beyond their means."

"That young girl by the window was in fashionable society in New York two years ago," her father, with a salary of $5,000, lived far beyond his means. The woman in mourning is the widow of a physician whose income averaged $6,000. He probably spent eight.

"That pretty girl is the daughter of a master builder, who lived comfortably among his old friends until he was seized with political ambition. He moved into a fine house, had his carriage, servants and gave balls. His dead, on which she supports her mother. There is hardly a woman here who is not the victim of the vulgar ambition which makes a family ape its wealthier neighbors in its own life."

"That is an ambition not peculiar to us Americans," said the visitor. "It is more common among us, because in other countries social position depends upon birth, while here it is usually fixed by money. How many families in this class do you know who are pretending to a large pecuniary wealth than they have?"

The visitor passes on the question to the reader.—Youth's Companion.

COTTON NET DRESSER.

They Came Very Thick, to the Work With New Flies.

Net is so soft and general that it is hard to give it up for heavy winter material, and that is the reason why there is such a demand for the heavy cotton nets that are made up of coarse sail fabric goods or over cotton with sail fabric.

DRESS OF COTTON NET.

A very charming dress of this variety was of wool brown net made over thin cloth of the same shade. Two panels of lighter brown trimmed the skirt and also made trimmings for the waist. The waist had a vest of the light material, with a deep ridge of black satin folded around the waist. The collar was of satin, with a flaring mesh of silk above it.

FOR PLAY-GOWNS.

Good Wash-Brown Gingham and Thin Striped Cambrics.

Gingham for fall are heavier than summer gingham. They are so coarse and warm that their texture reminds you of denim, and in this form they are very suitable for children's play-dresses, which indeed was the end for which they were intended.

These yards can be used to alternate years, the year in which they are not used by the fowls being devoted to the growth of a crop of clover. By having portable fences, and the yards upon opposite sides of the house, the cost of fencing will not be appreciably increased, and the ground upon which these have run can be plowed and sowed without difficulty. Raising a crop for one year takes out all the noxious qualities from the soil. It is, therefore, a question whether it is advisable to adopt movable houses or not.

If one decides to adopt such houses, and intends to keep a large number of fowls, we think the colony plan of the best which has been devised. The houses, for winter use, however, should be provided with a door. During the winter they can be drawn together so as to avoid a large amount of travel in caring for the fowls.—Country Gentleman.

SERVICEABLE PLAY DRESSER.

The bolero has come into the child's wardrobe, and some of the cunningest dresses have long-sleeved bolero jackets to be slipped over the white lawn waists. These boleros are double breasted, and are really meant for use and warmth. Many of these are of good wash-brown gingham.

Full cambrics also come in heavier grade, and for very small children they can be found in delicate lace, that is, to be slipped over the white lawn waists. The popular way to make up these cambrics for September wear is with a plaited skirt to be worn with a tuck sash of the same color.

Children's dresses continue larger; and, if of wash goods they cling to the balloon shapes. Neer goods, such as oriental silks and other inexpensive children's fabrics, have the coat sleeve to the elbow.

It's a Poor Rule.

The marquis of Lorne, when governor-general of Canada, was present at some sports held on the ice of the St. Lawrence. Though wrapped in furs he felt the cold acutely, and was astonished to see an ancient Indian man, dressed around barefooted, enveloped only in a blanket. He asked the savage how he managed to bear such a temperature when he had so little on. "Why you no cover face?" inquired the Indian. The marquis replied that no one ever did so, and he was accused of being a fool. "Good," rejoined the prairie king, "me all face," and walked away.

MOVABLE HEN HOUSES.

They Are a Good Thing When Properly Constructed and Cared For.

In Equipped movable poultry houses have been popular for a long time. The advantage of such houses can easily be seen in traveling from place to place, and the houses are made without floors, in avoiding cleaning them. There is also an advantage in having the flock small, for small flocks, though occupying the same space, usually do better than large ones.

Mr. H. J. Stoddard, of Hartford, Conn., some years ago advertised in "An Egg Farm" a colony plan of keeping fowls. This plan consisted in brief of portable houses, which were constructed like a roof, planked both ways, with doors and windows at the ends, and resting upon runners. There were no floors. Houses were moved frequently a few feet, and thus the droppings were cared for. The houses were to be painted with different colors, that the fowls might recognize them the more readily.

The objections to portable houses are: First, the greater cost; second, the greater amount of time required to care for the fowls; third, the fact that they do not afford the best quarters for the fowls during the winter. There were many fowls are kept, the labor question, usually ignored, is an important one, and anything which will save labor is worth consideration. In permanent fixed houses, convenience for watering, feeding, cleaning, etc., can be introduced, which it would not be feasible to introduce into movable houses. By providing two yards for each pen, which can be done with a little foresight, in laying out the henery, the objection to foul earth can be overcome.

These yards can be used to alternate years, the year in which they are not used by the fowls being devoted to the growth of a crop of clover. By having portable fences, and the yards upon opposite sides of the house, the cost of fencing will not be appreciably increased, and the ground upon which these have run can be plowed and sowed without difficulty. Raising a crop for one year takes out all the noxious qualities from the soil. It is, therefore, a question whether it is advisable to adopt movable houses or not.

If one decides to adopt such houses, and intends to keep a large number of fowls, we think the colony plan of the best which has been devised. The houses, for winter use, however, should be provided with a door. During the winter they can be drawn together so as to avoid a large amount of travel in caring for the fowls.—Country Gentleman.

Scald and allow them to stand overnight in a place where they will not freeze; this is one of the best ways of feeding out to poultry.

It is natural for some breeds of poultry to moult lighter each year, and hence what are often taken for defects are only natural to the breed.—St. Louis Republic.

Keep the Hen's Secret.

The secret of securing eggs is really no secret, for every experienced person knows that everything depends upon the conditions. It is not always the hen's secret, but the farmer's. The hen's main point is not to make a laying fat hen. If you have hens for market that are to be fattened, remove your laying hens. Keep the market hens confined closely, but keep your laying hens at work. The secret (if it is a secret) of making hens lay is to have them always busy at something. It is something they should be compelled to do from the time they come off the roost in the morning until they go on again at night. The laying hen is a scratching hen. The idle, lazy hen never lays. Do not forget the fact.—Farmer's Voice.

AMONG THE POULTRY.

Sunflowers are a good thing to have about the poultry quarters where they can be grown.

It is a good way to have the roosting poles and nests movable, and place them in the sun early in the day.

The survival of the fittest is good poultry doctrine. Find what individual hens are doing the best, and breed from them.

An egg contains from 25 to 27 per cent. solid matter, nearly 14 per cent. albumen. That means that laying hens are good eaters. They can spare each other, oil meal, milk, bran, etc.

A Boston commission merchant says that if farmers would market all the chickens and eggs they can spare each week, they would be surprised at the regular income that they were receiving, and they would find more profit in Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

A few weeks ago the editor was taken with a very severe cold that seemed him to be in a most miserable condition. It was undoubtedly a case of a croup and recognizing it as dangerous he took immediate steps to bring it quickly cured. From the advertisement of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and the many good recommendations included therein, he decided to make a first trial of the medicine. The way that it was satisfactory in its results, in putting it very mildly, indeed. It acted like magic, and the result was speedy and permanent cure. We have no hesitancy in recommending this excellent Cough Remedy to anyone afflicted with a cough or cold. In any form.—The Banner of Liberty, Lenoir, N. C., March 25, 1907.

The large barn of Mr. Hilary Bell, situated near Fairfield, was destroyed by fire.

The doctor may be a good old man, but even so, medical examinations and the use of medicine are not to be resorted to by every modern woman. They are embarrassing, often useless. They should not be submitted to unless everything else has been tried. In nine cases out of ten, there is no reason for them. In nine cases out of ten, the doctor in general practice isn't competent to treat female diseases. They make a branch of medicine by themselves. They are distinct from other ailments. They can be properly understood and treated only by one who has had years of actual practice and experience in this particular line. This is true of Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician of the Lavaline Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a remedy for all diseases of the reproductive organs of women, has been in actual use for more than twenty years. It cures every form of "female weakness."

Wickliffe, Ky., Sept. 20, 1897.—Both my husband and myself have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla with great success, and we value it very highly. Soon after we began taking it the color came back to our faces and our run down systems were built up. Hood's Sarsaparilla has done us so much good that we recommend it to all who need a blood purifier or toning up medicine.

WIND AS AN AID TO FLIGHT.

How Birds Take Advantage of It to Reach a Great Height.

Birds understand wind and all its vagaries, and they turn them all to account. Many problems which need scientific research are to be classed among those which they hope to solve some day, or, perhaps, despair of solving, a young bird begins to work out directly he is fledged. It will take some typical cases in which a bird derives help from the wind. It will be found that the wind, if it is to lift a bird, supplements the work of his wings, or even doing all the lifting, must either move in an upward direction, or if it does not deviate from the horizontal, it must be of unequal velocity. A wind that is unequal, or not uniform, may either be made up of currents moving at unequal rates, or it may blow more gently, now strongly. A uniform horizontal breeze cannot lift or maintain a heavy body in the air unless that body has momentum of its own. A bird, however, that is since the bird we must try to put ourselves in his position—becomes part of the moving current. The momentum required he derives either from his own wing-beats or from the inequality of the wind.

When a bird rises with wings outspread and motionless, there must be inequality, supposing that the wind is horizontal. A lark, when he is flying upward—always singing in spite of the steepness of the incline, as if to show how easy it is—invariably faces the wind. When he turns away from it he ceases to rise and generally loses elevation. When he wishes again to rise, he turns his head toward the wind. To take another instance: A cormorant, seated at last, wishes to join his comrades who are trying their wings in a rock not far off. The wind is blowing toward the rock in question; accordingly, he begins by flying in the opposite direction, so that the wind may assist him as he struggles to rise from the water. This feat accomplished, he turns round and makes all sail for his destination. The lark and the cormorant are quite right in thinking that the wind will help to lift them, but it does so only because it increases in velocity as they rise. Near the surface of the land or the sea it is retarded by friction.

An anemometer reveals a very marked increase in velocity at successive elevations not far from the ground. By means of kite experiments have been made up to a height of 1,000 feet and the wind has been continuous, though it is much more gradual. Were it not for the increase of velocity with altitude, the lark, after his first jump from the ground, would, but for his own efforts, move backward with the wind. It would not be long before the wind would lift a balloon from which the gas has escaped. But perpetually passing from a slower to a more rapid current (in theory it is convenient to divide the air into definite strata), he has always an inertia which enables the wind to lift him. He is still, in a sense, at rest. From some slight elevation he glides downwards till they are near the ground or the surface of the sea, then (possibly by a twist at the waist) they turn suddenly and face the wind, which lifts them. Their former position, the principle applied in the process begins again. It may be that when birds soar, i. e., rise in spirals without moving their wings, they are availing themselves at each upward step of the increasing velocity of the wind. But the conclusion is not an elevation of a mile or more, and there the increase must be a negligible quantity, if it has not at length reached the vanishing point; and, therefore, we have to look elsewhere for an explanation of soaring.—Knowledge.

There is no learned judge, skilled lawyer, or court of justice that is capable of reconciling the effort with the constitutional laws that govern the issue of money in this country.

The people have been deceived, officials in power, chosen to administer justice under the laws, have ignored their sworn duty, and given aid to the scheme that has paralyzed industry, reduced property values one-half, and beggared millions.

There is no authority of law, either specific or by inference, by which gold alone is made the only money with which to discharge debts, either public or private. The effort to make it so is unconstitutional and a national calamity.

Plain and ample information, facts, and truth, concerning this almost successful scheme to corner the wealth of the people, is now being printed in the Cincinnati Enquirer, a newspaper which the combined power of money has failed to muzzle or buy.

WOULD MAKE A STAK NOVEL.

Copper, Can and Hump-Backed Boy Form a Plot for a Tale.

The tikest chopper of a downtown station on the Sixth avenue line may flush out as a novelist or a playwright before long. He is now hesitating between writing "Mosses, Timber and Knots" or throwing himself into the imbecile dunes of one of the yellow concerns which grinds out Ten Young Stories by Ten Young Women in Ten Minutes.

While a belated patron was waiting for a train ticket, who had left his choppy for a few moments to look before, said to the patron, whom he had come to know by reason of his regularity:

"Did you see a copper stop at the south stairway and reach up to the roof of the garage and take down a tin can and something tied up in a paper?"

The patron had not seen a copper reach up or down as described.

"Maybe he's changed off tonight," continued the choppy. "He maybe he's left. But whenever he comes around that corner at just such a time, and he swings his night stick and chuckles low, and then there is another chuckle still lower, most always. Then the copper he walks to that stairway on the south side of the street, and goes out and up and down, and then he reaches up, and he takes down the can and turns it up to his face and then he takes something out of the paper and eats whatever it is, and then he takes another swing out of the can, and then another bite, and then a swing, and then a bite, until there ain't nothin' more to swing or to bite, then he puts up the can and whistles low again, and then he walks off, swinging his night stick. Then when he turns the corner he comes out of the garage, and walks around and looks up and down, and when he don't see nobody looking he takes the can and scoots down in the direction of the ferry. That thing's been going on down below, just as I've told it, ever since about last spring."

The patron said it was an interesting story.

"There's a d-d big sensation in that thing, true as you live. I am thinking of working it."

"Why do you think there is a sensation?" asked the patron.

"Think? Why it has all of the parts of one of them Sunday novels. There's the copper coming round, whistling low. Then grabbing the can and the meat in the package. And then the low whistle again and the copper and the boy coming up from a dark place, looking around, taking the can, and making for the ferry. And he's a hump-backed boy, at that."

"Now, that boy is hired by thieves to feed the copper while they are at work, and, who is still the copper's story says as they're running, that boy has a sister who is a shoplifter. And when she got pinched this copper he gets her off easy, and she is at liberty, and she cooks him cake and buys a can of beer and sends them to the copper's hole in the wall. The copper says, 'that's work up another thousand in circulation right in this district.'"

"There's so many situations in it. That's the beauty of the thing. It's good for more stories than one. I have to do anything that would cause the copper any trouble, but I reckon a man oughtn't to hide his light under a bushel for the sake of anybody else. I'm going to spring it before some of them lobster reporters gets on to it."—N. Y. Sun.

Big and Little Brains.

The biggest brain in existence is that of the elephant, though not in proportion to the size of the animal. But the matter of proportion does not seem to be of absolute importance as an index of mentality. There is a little South American monkey, which, though not particularly intelligent, has a brain bigger than a man's relative to size. Birds have remarkably big brains; probably no feathered species has a larger brain in proportion to its size than the chickadee. The crow and sparrow possess brains bigger than those of most birds, as might be expected, inasmuch as they are so notably clever. It has been ascertained, by the way, that large men live longer than do smaller men, the only apparent reason being that there is a greater mass of body to be moved. The larger the machine, the more efficient the dynamo required to run it.

A Noiseless Horseshoe.

A rubber-tired and noiseless horseshoe, which is expected to revolutionize horse running and racing, has been invented by a western genius. The horseshoe is in the ordinary shape, except that a circular ring of rubber is embedded in its bottom. The inventor is John W. Monahan, formerly chief of the fire department of Des Moines, Ia. The rubber portion treads naturally to give the horse a foot which is cushioned in climbing and descending steep hills or where traveling over roads made slippery by mud or ice or other agent.

WOMEN used to think "female" diseases could only be treated after "local" examinations by physicians. Dread of such treatment kept thousands of modest women silent about their suffering. KLONDIKE THORNS.

The Entangling Vines Which Torment Weary Wayfarers.

H. Juneau, of Dodge City, Kan., who, with his brother Joseph, founded the town of Juneau, Alaska, now counted as the leading citizen of the famous territory has an interesting story to tell of the dark side of life on the Upper Yukon. Mr. Juneau spent several years in Alaska, and helped lay out the streets of the town which now bears his name.

In speaking of his early experience in Alaska, Mr. Juneau said: "I helped lay out the town in 1881, and have been there several times since. We first named the place Harborsburg, but the people changed the name after a year or two. I have found the country full of disappointments, and I don't want to paint the picture too bright. Enough has not been said of the dark side.

"It is no place for men of weak constitution. The hardships to be encountered require the strongest hearts and sinews. I have not heard of anything published of the fact that a large portion of the country is covered with a moss and vine which causes sharp thorns, like porcupine quills, with saw edges. These will penetrate leather boots, and a knife will remove them. These are worse than the mosquito pest.

"Along the southeast Alaska presents a grand and picturesque view for miles in extent, from an ocean steamer. It is a good idea to get acquainted with Alaska and enjoy its scenery. It is a grand country to visit, and its scenery surpasses any mountain scenery in the world. Travel on water can be provided for in comfort, and he enjoyed without great risk or danger.

"Alaska is a country on edge. It is so mountainous. Bains are mainly filled with ice. The weather is always hard in great extremes. When there is noise there is noise and devil's club, the latter a vine that winds around everything it can clutch. Persons walking become entangled in a network of moss and devil's club, and passage is extremely difficult and 'torturous,' as it is with torturers."—Detroit Free Press.

SECRET OF LONGEVITY.

Sir Isaac Holden Believed in Fruit and Fresh Air.

Sir Isaac Holden, who died recently in his 91st year, was neither a teetotaler nor a non-smoker. Sir Isaac was a man with theories. According to him, the two great essentials for those who would live long and be healthy are plenty of fresh air and plenty of fruit. His rule was never, if he could help it, to spend less than half his life in the open air. When he entered his first pension he said to his employer that he would be glad to have an hour daily in the afternoon for a walk. If granted, he would not ask for any holiday, or would make up otherwise for the time so lost. This was agreed to. Sir Isaac took his walk daily, and to this, he used to say, he owed both health and fortune.

But though in addition to fresh air he believed in plenty of fruit, Sir Isaac was not a vegetarian. He did not abstain from meat, but he abstained. Like Wesley, whose "Natural Philosophy" he studied when a boy, he saw in farinaceous food a thing to be avoided by the elderly. "I take for my breakfast," he said a few years ago, "one baked apple, one orange, 20 grapes, and a biscuit made from bananas. My midday meal consists of about three ounces of beef or mutton, with now and again a half cupful of soup. If I take a little fish, I take so much less of meat. For supper I practically repeat my breakfast. The orange was my favorite fruit. Wine he eschewed; but on returning from the house of commons to Queen Anne's mansion he had a tumbler of whisky and hot water before going to bed. He took no drink with his food, and he obliged him to use a vegetable soup. He smoked two or three cigars a day, from which he used to say that he derived both comfort and benefit."—St. James' Gazette.

Didn't Mean It.

The reconstructed Grand Central depot in New York will contain the largest railroad waiting room in the world. Besides, there will be smoking rooms for men and parlors for women, all highly decorated and adequate of the times. The floor space will be doubled to accommodate the 11,167,000 passengers annually who use the station. Once upon a time a Vanderbilt said: "The public be damned!" but he really didn't mean it.
